As a graduate student or postdoc you may play a central role with students who are seeking help when they are distressed or are distressing. You are often in a direct position to observe students and their behavior either in the classroom or research group. Students frequently turn to those close to them, including graduate students and postdocs, to obtain advice and support.

Encountering distressed and distressing students can be difficult. This workshop will provide you with skills how to handle these situations and inform you about the network of assistance available at UC Davis for these students and yourself.

Workshop Instructors:
Jennifer Chow, Care Manager, Office of Student Support and Judicial Affairs
Donald Dudley, Director, Office of Student Support and Judicial Affairs
Roy Grabow, Psychologist, Student Health & Counseling Services
